My family is in Burgos and I am from child familiar with this word. Sometimes this word was also used in pronominal form. Argallarse meant tipping or walking inclined. Sometimes you could have a metaphorical value. In a dispute between two brothers, for example, the father put part or is argallaba " " the favorite son. When it comes to wills, the argallarse by someone made that turn out more substantial.

In reality and, given that it is clear that the prefix is idle because no one autoflagela to another person, the verb in the infinitive should be " flagellar " and never " self-flagellation " as sometimes we hear say. It would be as a flogging (punishment spanking) exerted against one's self, in real and physical sense (unlikely) or in the metaphorical sense of reproach and sour self-censorship.

The scholars of this expression seem to coincide in that " soups " refer to " soups of Brook " expression that appears in Don Quixote, and which is equivalent to " Pebble ". However does not seem to clear the metaphorical relationship between throwing a pebble with a slingshot and be clearly superior to someone in something. There is who has wanted to see a play on words between " honda " and " 34 wave;. The existence of these rebounds and ensuing waves clearly suggesting its superior ability.

It is generally associated to States or extreme situations and found also in biblical sources.

guaperrima is incorrectly written, and should be written as "guaperrima" as meaning:
GORGEOUS. It is actually a sort of neologism which aims to bypass the rules that govern the formation of superlatives in Spanish. Possibly the more or less conscious idea is to highlight a quality forming, so to speak, a " 34 superlative superlative. This possibility does not exist in Spanish and due to this he invents a form that will replace " gorgeous " The only adjectives whose superlative just in-érrimo / to are those that in grade positive end in-ro or in-re. In this way, " 34 neat; It would a superlative " pulquérrimo " and poor would give " impoverished ". In both cases it is also possible to use the regular superlative: " served 34, " 34 very poor; The cultivated form of the superlative might think (although not true) that the quality is even more enhanced. There may lie the invention of 34, guaperrima " as the acme of the courage, with which a lady has been graceful.

Normally opened a more or less extended period in which one was tense, pending news that eliminated any reason for concern or that, in the worst cases, confirmed that something nefarious or favorably had occurred. Up to here my experience personal. In more recent times I have had the opportunity to inform me that the expression may have to do with " sedan " which is an Italian word for our " 34 cherry; and it was the place that was publicly exposed inmates so they suffered public shame and the derision. According to this meaning meet around sedan would be placed on evidence, in shame, subjected to the mockery of others.
